

John K. Rabiej

John K. Rabiej is partnering with the George Washington University School of Law Complex Litigation Center. He served as the Deputy Director of the Bolch Judicial Institute for one year and the Director of the Duke Law Center for Judicial Studies for seven years. He joined Duke Law in early 2011 after serving one year as the Executive Director/Director of Judicial Outreach for The Sedona Conference. As the Director of the Judicial Studies Center, Mr. Rabiej oversaw the running of the master's program for judges, publication of Judicature for five years, and operation of the Electronic Discovery Reference Model for three years.

Previously, Mr. Rabiej was the Chief of the Rules Committee Support Office for twenty years, establishing and heading the office that staffed the six rules committees of the United States Judicial Conference. He has written extensively on eDiscovery, including chapter 37A of Moore's Federal Practice, chapters in Weinstein's Federal Evidence Manual, co-authored with Judge Lee Rosenthal and Professor David Levi the FEDERAL CIVIL PROCEDURE MANUAL, Juris Publisher (2014), and co-authored with former Judge Alex Kozinski the FEDERAL APPELLATE PROCEDURE MANUAL, Juris Publisher (2014). He has written the "Director" columns in eight issues of Judicature (2015-2017) and more than twenty articles on eDiscovery, which were published in the LexisNexis Emerging Issues series of expert commentaries (2008-2014). He has also written many articles on rules-related issues, including the meaning and purposes of rule amendments.

Mr. Rabiej was elected to the American Law Institute in 2005. He sits on the Chief Justice's Rules Advisory Commission, North Carolina (term ending December 31, 2023).
